Princess in the Park - track 3

Just after a particularly violent time around us in Serbia I sat in a café absorbing the new atmosphere of a faltering peace. Around me was devastation at every level: terrorized families; destroyed buildings; shattered lives. Propaganda, deception and violence had wrought their worst.

In the midst of this wretched scene, a little girl toddled out of an alley into a park gripping the hand of her grandfather. She was a picture of innocence and peace against a backdrop of evil and fear.

The scene could be in Gaza city or New York, Baghdad or Jerusalem - an innocent life enmeshed into the terrible power games of an evil world.
